Excerpt: . . . a point to display the flag in some window. Smaller flags may be suitably arranged. The flags of our allies come in appropriately. A fine appearance is made of a stand of five flags, the American flag in the center and the flags of some of the Allies grouped two and two on either side. Or you can increase this number to seven or even nine. Some fourteen or fifteen nations are now represented among the Allies, and this number will possibly be increased by the time this article appears. Some business men have taken the trouble to obtain the flags of all these nations, large and small, and strung out in a long line they make a striking appearance. Among the colors we find some that we have seldom seen and the display is instructive as well as patriotic. There is a good demand for small flags and many sales may be effected. Nearly every automobile you see has two or three flags flying, and people are buying them largely to display in the windows of their homes. In fact we doubt if there was ever such a demand for flags. Visits from distinguished foreigners have caused much interest and enthusiasm. Photographs of our visitors have been displayed widely and doubtless thousands have been sold. These afford good material for exhibition purposes in your war window. They are educational and tend to promote patriotism in the young. Portraits of our own leaders should...
