Not illustrated. 1842 Excerpt: . to a rustic bridge, which leads you out upon an isolated rock of vast height above the valley. But, in fact, the whole country round Baden-Baden is full of delicious walks and rides. In the very outskirts of this little Babel of Fashion you find villages of the most old-fashioned description buried in their orchards, and exhibiting the aspect and manners of far past ages. But one thing to us was very striking. The surliness and incommunicativeness of the peasantry in the immediate neighbourhood. This, so different to the general character of the German bauers, however, required no explanation. It is the result of the haughty and insolent treatment which they have received from the crowds of empty, corrupt, and purse-proud upstarts, which come in flocks round such a place. 3. JOURNEY BY WILDBAD TO STUTTGARD. OUR. journey from Baden-Baden by Wildbad to Stuttgart, in finest summer weather, was most charming. The way was for the greater part of the distance to Wildbad, through the Black Forest. Besides a very Swiss character, which we immediately discerned in the houses with their outside galleries and projecting roofs, and the church towers with their domes and short spires covered with bright zink or with coloured and burnished tiles, the novelty of this peculiar forest scenery was in itself a great delight. We were now surrounded by those dark woods of which we had heard so much, and whose noble timber we had seen so often floating down...
