A stately lady was looking out of the window of an apartment in the Royal Chateau of Amboise, in the month of June, 1470. She was still handsome, though many years of anxiety, misfortune, and trouble, had left their traces on her face. In the room behind her, a knight was talking to a lady sitting at a tambour frame; a lad of seventeen was standing at another window stroking a hawk that sat on his wrist, while a boy of nine was seated at a table examining the pages of an illuminated missal. What will come of it, Eleanor the lady at the window said, turning suddenly and impatiently from it. It seems past belief that I am to meet as a friend this haughty earl, who has for fifteen years been the bitterest enemy of my House. It appears almost impossible. Tis strange indeed, my Queen; but so many strange things have befallen your Majesty that you should be the last to wonder at this. At any rate, as you said but yesterday, naught but good can come of it. He has done his worst against you, and one can scarce doubt that if he chooses he has power to do as much good for you, as in past times he has done you evil. Tis certain that his coming here shows he is in earnest, for his presence, which is sure sooner or later to come to the ears of the Usurper, will cause him to fall into the deepest disgrace. And yet it seemed, the queen said, that by marrying his daughter to Clarence he had bound himself more firmly than ever to the side of York....
